MALCOLM GLADWELL

Bestselling Author

Revenge of the Tipping Point

In his latest book, New York Times bestselling author, Malcolm Gladwell, revisits the phenomenon of social epidemics and examines the ways in which we have learned to tinker with and shape the spread of ideas and trends — sometimes with great success, sometimes with disastrous consequences. Treasury and finance professionals need to apply the concept of the tipping point — how small changes can make a big impact — to influence their organization's success or even the world for the better. In this thought-provoking keynote, Gladwell shares the insights needed to meet these challenges head-on in innovative ways.

Getting Big Things Done

The world's largest database of major projects reveals that a shockingly small percentage of projects are completed on budget, on time, and with the outcome envisioned. That means the most important elements of the business case are far off base. Worse, projects aren't merely at risk of being a little off - catastrophic failure is frighteningly common, and the story is the same around the world for projects of all sizes. In this talk, Dan Gardner draws on his book How Big Things Get Done to look at why failure is so common and what successful project leaders can teach us about conceiving, planning, and delivering on our own projects, big and small.
